DEVASTATION FROM HURRICANE FLORENCE

STORY BY MARSHA HEWITT

From cows to cotton, Hurricane Florence spared nothing in the northeastern portion of the state. Some experts assess the damage to agriculture as greater than the impact from Hurricane Matthew in 2016, and some flood waters were higher than those during the Flood of the Century in 2015.

“With an estimated $125 million in agricultural losses after Florence, Governor McMaster’s inclusion of agriculture in his request for federal support is critical for the state’s largest industry,” Commissioner Hugh Weathers said.

Windblown cotton is not only harder to pick, but both yield and quality are considerably reduced.

Flooding in fields near the river means no harvest at all in areas like this.

Weathers and Congressman Tom Rice went on an aerial tour of Chesterfield, Dillon, Florence, Horry, Marlboro and Marion counties the week after the flood. They met with about 60 farmers in Dillon, Marion and Lake City. The commissioner said he has visited one farm in that area two of the last three years because of natural disasters.

The farmers verified that cotton was affected by high wind, peanuts were damaged by drenched soil, and soybeans lost pods. The eastern corner of state was the epicenter of the storm, with Loris, Dillon, Marion, and Horry counties taking the most abuse.

Marion County farmer Neal Baxley said cotton that was open took a bad hit, while the cotton that was not open got all tangled up from the wind. While he did pick some cotton last week, he said it was too soon to tell about the quality. “We need some sunshine,” he said.

The National Guard delivered hay by helicopter to cattle farmers near Aynor and Conway.

Leaf spot in peanuts is an issue, he continued, while the early beans need to be harvested so that they don’t mold. “Late beans might be all right,” he said. Corn, on the other hand, “looks like matchsticks” laid down in the field.

Baxley said some of his neighbors had cotton and peanuts planted in the oxbows along the Great Pee Dee River. “They can’t get to them. The water is over the top of the crop.”

The irony is that this year’s cotton was potentially one of the best crops local farmers had. The area’s hog houses and chicken houses seemed to be all right.

State veterinarian Dr. Boyd H. Parr reported that the Clemson LPH, Regulatory Service and Extension teams facilitated evacuations of livestock and pets and worked with farmers to protect livestock that could not be moved and also protect them from wind and rising waters.

COMMISSIONER’S CORNER

HUGH E. WEATHERS
SOUTH CAROLINA

AN ALL TOO FAMILIAR SITUATION

Mother nature has taken on many unforgettable names for South Carolinians in the last four years – Joaquin, Matthew, and most recently, Florence. It’s mindboggling that we would endure catastrophic hurricanes in 2015, 2016, and 2018. Worse than that, this third year of destructive wind and flooding is financially devastating to many of our farmers, particularly those in the Pee Dee. Needless to say, I hoped and prayed that 2018 would not bring yet another reason to write a column like this.

Over the last couple of weeks, I have seen both the big picture and the granular detail of agricultural loss in South Carolina. Thanks to the support of the National Guard, Congressman Tom Rice of the 7th district and I took a daylong aerial tour of Chesterfield, Dillon, Florence, Horry, Marlboro and Marion counties. From the helicopter, it was often hard to tell where a river ended and flooding began.

The view from above was disorienting and upsetting. Sadly, it’s a view I remember well from the last time I flew over similar damage. Just a few months back I drove through the town of Nichols to see how its recovery was coming along after Hurricane Matthew two years ago. Well, on Tuesday I flew the same route over the flooded streets of Nichols, and it was 2016 all over again – and this was before the rivers would crest.

We made several stops that day, starting with Dillon, where we stood in a cotton field to see the damage up close as farmers gathered around and told us about their losses. We saw plants that were drenched from 22.7 inches of rain, lint that had been blown right off of the boll, and seed that was significantly damaged. Later in Marion, we saw more damage to cotton, peanuts, hemp and soybeans after meeting with area farmers. Our final stop was in Lake City and included additional up-close inspection of peanuts, soybeans, hemp, field peas and even cucumber fields that were hit hard by Florence.

During the days that followed our tour, the Department of Agriculture engaged with representatives of the USDA, Farm Bureau, Clemson University, and other stakeholders to determine an estimate of total agricultural loss due to Florence. As you’ve read in the news, Governor Henry McMaster included our estimate of $125 million in his comprehensive request to our congressional delegation for federal aid. That agriculture was included in that request is both critical and hopeful. I was able to deliver that message personally to President Trump when he came to Conway to assess the damage first-hand.

I’ll leave you with another piece of hope: while visiting with farmers in Marion (this was the third time in four years that I had visited this same family farm after a hurricane-related natural disaster), I had the refreshing experience of talking with several farmers’ children whose schools were still closed due to flooding. These young people already knew more about farming than most adults, and their love of this way of life was inspiring. It was an important reminder to me that in times of mild weather or devastating storms, our responsibilities as leaders in agriculture is to focus on the next year ahead for farming as well as the next generation to come of farmers in South Carolina.

Hugh Weathers

HURRICANE FLORENCE

“All the experience and planning Livestock Poultry Health and ESF-17 supporting agencies have put in over the years preparing for animal/agriculture emergency response have certainly been put to the test with Hurricane Florence,” he said.

The team, led by Dr. Charlotte Krugler, Emergency Preparedness Veterinarian, have been staffing the ESF-17 desk in the SC Emergency Operations Center around the clock, starting six days before Florence made landfall.

Many cattle were stranded in flooded pastures, so it was the National Guard to the rescue. A helicopter brought hay to Aynor last week for farmers to feed their cows. Mike Maynard, the director of the Florence County Emergency Operations Center, and Dr. Krugler arranged for the helicopter transport.

Farmers gratefully unload hay donated for stranded livestock in flooded areas.

Donated hay was stockpiled at the fairgrounds in Florence, where it was distributed to Nichols, Loris, Aynor, Conway, and Georgetown, among other places. Clemson Extension’s livestock and forages agent, Lee van Blake, was also involved. “We have started an online hay application form folks can fill out who need hay. That should help with the dissemination and need of any hay,” he said.

Extension agents are leading the collections of damage assessments to facilitate recovery assistance. Parr added that he was extremely proud of the group’s tireless work to help the animal and ag communities survive.

Additionally, Extension agents have been working with farmers and donors to transport hay and feed. With the help of Florence EMD and the National Guard, resources were moved from the Florence fairgrounds to an emergency pet shelter site in Georgetown County last week.

Commissioner Weathers will continue to talk with farmers, the USDA and Clemson as South Carolina’s agricultural communities begin the slow process of recovery.

DISASTER SURVIVOR ASSISTANCE TEAMS WORKING IN SC

FEMA Disaster Survivor Assistance teams are working in South Carolina areas affected by Hurricane Florence, but survivors should not wait for one of these teams to arrive before they register with FEMA.

Teams are equipped with latest mobile technology, allowing them to register survivors for disaster assistance, update their records and make referrals to community partners. Six counties have been designated for FEMA Individual Assistance: Chesterfield, Dillon, Horry, Georgetown, Marion and Marlboro counties.

Survivors can register by visiting DisasterAssistance.gov or by calling 800-621-3362.

By registering with FEMA, survivors may qualify for federal disaster assistance such as help paying for rent or a temporary place to live, or for essential home repairs not covered by insurance. SBA applicants may apply online at DisasterLoan.sba.gov.

FARM BUREAU AGRICULTURAL AID FOUNDATION ESTABLISHED

In the wake of Hurricane Florence, South Carolina farm families and rural communities face estimated damages of $1.2 billion. In response to this tragedy and the tremendous needs of farmers and rural communities, South Carolina Farm Bureau has established the “SCFB Agricultural Aid Foundation.” Contributions to this fund will be used to help farm families impacted by the flood.

“Farmers in South Carolina are no strangers to hurricanes, flooding and natural disasters, especially after what we’ve experienced in the last few years,” said SCFB President Harry Ott. “They are the backbone of this state and this fund allows us to show them our support in their time of need.”

Donations to the fund should be made to the SCFB Agricultural Aid Foundation, which is a 501(C)3 charitable non-profit foundation. All contributions are tax deductible.

Please make checks payable to:

AG COUNCIL TO TOUR HOBCAW BARONY

The SC Agricultural Council will tour historic Hobcaw Barony on Friday, Oct. 19. Hobcaw Barony is an internationally known center for research, education and conservation. It has been dedicated to research in forestry, marine biology, and the care and propagation of wildlife and flora and fauna by South Carolina’s institutions of higher education for five decades. After leaving Hobcaw, the tour will travel to a seafood market.

Due to bus seating, the tour will be limited to 47 people, so pre-registration is required by Tuesday, Oct. 9. Check-in will be at 7 a.m. at the South Carolina Farm Bureau in Cayce. The bus will leave at 7:30 a.m. and return by 6 p.m. Attendees should wear comfortable walking shoes and bring a cooler if they wish to purchase fresh seafood. Cost of the tour is $65, which includes transportation, fees, lunch, beverages, and snacks.

For more information about the Ag Council tour and to reserve a space, contact Steve Slice, at 803-360-2845 or scagriculturalcouncil@gmail.com. For information about Hobcaw, visit hobcawbarony.org.

SNAP EXTENDED FOR HURRICANE VICTIMS

The U.S. Department of Agriculture granted flexibility to allow South Carolina residents to replace food purchased with SNAP benefits that was lost due to power outages and flooding caused by Hurricane Florence. Over 185,000 impacted households in 26 counties now have until Oct. 15, 2018 to report food loss to the state and request replacement benefits.

“When this many people are facing immediate hardship in South Carolina, it’s crucial for USDA and the state to offer as much flexibility as possible to recover food losses,” said Acting Deputy Under Secretary Brandon Lipps. “This waiver will provide sufficient reporting time for households who are facing power outages, flooding, and other obstacles in the wake of this disaster.”

SNAP regulations normally require households to report food loss within 10 days of purchase. However, the state requested a waiver from USDA’s Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) to allow households additional time.

The waiver applies to the following counties: Berkeley, Beaufort, Calhoun, Charleston, Chesterfield, Clarendon, Colleton, Darlington, Dillon, Dorchester, Florence, Georgetown, Hampton, Horry, Jasper, Kershaw, Lancaster, Lee, Lexington, Marion, Marlboro, Orangeburg, Richland, Sumter, Williamsburg, and York.

FNS is ready to consider additional waivers and other actions that may be needed to help program participants who have lost food due to the disaster and to simplify the application process for affected households, upon request from the state.

For more information on FNS assistance during times of disaster, visit fns.usda.gov/disaster.
